Calves Cannot Drink Ice!

We all know that optimum calf starter grain intake on our preweaned calves depends heavily on drinking water. But, if you have cold housing, winter weather poses special challenges.

Calves cannot drink ice. So, if we are going to encourage our calves to drink water during freezing weather, what are our management choices?

[NOT feeding water should not be a choice.]

- Feed water as soon after milk feeding as practical – it is nice to have water in front of calves while they are still standing up after drinking milk.
- Feed a volume close to the expected consumption - less water to dump or freeze. If the same person feeds water daily, frequent observation makes this more practical.
- If practical, start with water above well water temperature (50°F). It will take longer to freeze.
